It can ask about what's going

The Difference Between "How Are You" and "How Are You Doing"

Note: I appreciate the logic of the subtle distinction made by some other answers here that

"are you going to" refers to a pre-planned activity and really means "are you going through with the pre-planned action" whereas "will you (go)" is a more open-ended question simply asking "are you likely to do something in the future"

-- but this is possibly not a clear-cut distinction because not all speakers might mean the same thing; so such a statement needs to be interpreted in context.

The Free Dictionary
To form the present continuous you must use the verb 'be'. So the correct form of the sentence is: 'Where are you going?' It is incorrect to say 'Where you going?'

However, many people will use this incorrect form in informal situations. Sometimes it's very difficult to hear the difference between "where" and "where are".
